We Poor...but we Hungry

Po-Boy (Poor-Boy) Sandwich

Po-Boy is the generic name for the famous "Poor-Boy" New Orleans sandwich made with French bread. Po-Boys are always made with French Bread and can be filled with anything, fried oysters, shrimp, fish, soft-shelled crabs, crawfish, roast beef & pork, meatballs, smoked sausage and much more. They are served either "dressed" with a full range of condiments (usually including mayonnaise or mustard with lettuce and tomato) or "undressed" (plain). This sandwich is purely American with its variety of different sauces and condiments. Po-Boys are uniquely coastal due to fresh local seafood and always accompanied with crispy and airy French bread.

The predecessor to the Po-Boy in New Orleans was known as:

La Mediatrice - The PeaceMaker, a loaf of French bread, split-buttered and filled with fried fish, shrimp or oysters. La Mediatrice is a poetic name derived from 19th-century husbands would take a Po-Boy home to cushion a possible rough reception from his wife for being out late, from a night on the town. Every husband who was unexplainably detained, laughingly carried home a Po-Boy, or Mediatrice, to make "peace" with his anxiously waiting wife. Rightly called the "Peace-maker," for it alone was enough to bring a smile to the face of the most disheartened wife.

The "Poor Boy" term began as a colloquial term for the local trolley men who were on strike in New Orleans when the transit workers, streetcar drivers and conductors strike begin July 1, 1929. It was followed by transit strikes throughout the nation, which provoked an emotional display of public support for the striking "Poor Boys". The 1929 strike still ranks among one of the nation's most violent when eighteen hundred trolley men struck in New Orleans as a result of a union contract dispute. During the strike and subsequent riot, two strikers were killed, five trolleys were burned, trucks, cars and a barn were dynamited, rail tracks were destroyed and switches were vandalized.

The two brothers, Clovis and Benjamin Martin, took pity on the striking transit workers and began offering free sandwiches made from any leftovers to all the "Poor-Boys" who showed up at their restaurant's back door at the end of the day.

1925 - According to New Orleans' historians, the Po' Boy sandwich was invented by Clovis and Benjamin Martin, brothers and former streetcar drivers, in 1929 at their Martin Brothers Coffee Stand and Restaurant on St. Claude Avenue in the French Market.

For five cents, a striker could buy a sandwich filled with gravy and trimmings (end pieces from beef roasts) or gravy and sliced potatoes or any other leftover available.

Po-Boy's were an overnight sensation, but their fame really took off after being filled with seafood, since fresh fish and shellfish were so abundant in coastal areas. Po-Boys made with fried fish, shrimp and oysters became all the rage and the affluent crowd soon joined in, because at lunch, dinnertime or snack time, a Po-Boy filled with anything is always; "Good to the Last Bite". Just take delicate crusty French Bread and cup off the ends, split the upper and lower portions, brush with melted butter, stuff with meat, seafood, veggies and cheese, the Po-Boy, the best sandwich you've ever tasted, come to Po-Boy's and taste one fo' yo' self!
